1

MADONNA

Madonna has sold almost half a billion records and was the first female popstar to take control of her image, songwriting and business ventures. She was also the first recording artist to amass over one billion dollars from touring. The queen of reinvention, this fabulous pink rhinestone ensemble is taken from Madonna's 2008 album cover 'Music', which fused Americana with Country Pop; another bold departure from an artist who always melds multiple genres.

JOHN ENTWISTLE

The Who bassist John Entwistle was one quarter of one of the most important Rock bands of all time. This bass guitar was purchased as part of the “Flock of Buzzards,” a road case that contained five Status Buzzard basses made for Entwistle. This bass and the other four were used both for live work with The Who and with his band The John Entwistle Band. The bass is a group effort in design - Status Graphite designed the all-graphite body, the neck is made of seven pieces of Zebrano and Wenge. John approached Hans Peter Wilfer, founder of Warwick Basses to design the guitar.

3

TRENT REZNOR

Signed by Reznor, frontman of Nine Inch Nails, the Gibson Explorer is a familiar ‘axe’ amongst metal, heavy rock and industrial musicians. Played by the likes of Metallica, Scorpions, Coheed and Cambria and Foo Fighters. As well as writing classics such as ‘Closer’ and ‘Hurt’ (famously covered by Johnny Cash), Trent Reznor and bandmate Atticus Ross have also written the music for Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles and Disney Pixar’s Soul, a stark and wonderful contrast from their Industrial Metal roots.

CARL HARVEY

Guitarist Carl Harvey of Reggae and Ska legends Toots and the Maytals and The Aggrovators started his own guitar company to create instruments that met his exacting standards and the brilliantly named “Rastacasta” was born. This guitar is the very first prototype of his Sweet Elite model and was acquired directly from Harvey. The guitar is based on a heavily modified 1972 Stratocaster, and was designed by Glenn Sweetwood, hence the name ‘Sweet’ Elite.

SLASH

Rock N' Roll would not be the same without Guns N' Roses. Guitarist Slash made his name with the group in the late 1980's and has helped define the sound of all modern rock guitar since. A truly gifted player, he wore these tie-dye corduroy trousers and t-shirt at the Indy 500 in 2008, while in the band Velvet Revolver.
